

Wormald celebrates 125 years of fire protection

26 March 2014: This March, leading fire protection specialist Wormald celebrated 125 years of operation.

Wormald was established in Australia in 1889 by brothers Joseph and Harry Wormald. Ten years later, the first Wormald system was installed in New Zealand at Northern Roller Mills in Auckland.

In 1990, Wormald joined Tyco, the world's leading fire and security company which operates in almost 50 countries. Wormald is now Australasia's leading provider of fire protection solutions to businesses and homes across Australia and New Zealand.

Peter Fermor, Managing Director of Tyco Fire & Security New Zealand said, "Wormald has maintained its commitment to protecting people and property from fire for over 125 years. As part of the Tyco business, Wormald has access to a remarkable depth and breadth of physical and intellectual resources, providing global strength to reinforce our local know-how.

"The Wormald business has evolved so much and the team is constantly developing new technologies and applications to better serve its customers. It's exciting to think how the business will develop further over the coming years."

Wormald's designs, manufactures, installs and services fire safety products and equipment, and offers a comprehensive range of fire protection services including engineering advice and fire safety training. Wormald supplies specialist fire protection services to a range of industries including mining, marine, industrial, commercial and retail.

For further information about Wormald's fire safety products and services, call 0800 4 WORMALD or visit www.wormald.co.nz.

-Ends-

Media - for further information please contact:

Claire Smith or Jessica Fell, Write Away Communication + Events

Ph: +61 2 9978 1400 Email: claire@writeaway.com.au or jessica_fell@writeaway.com.au

Mike Baird, Marketing Manager, Wormald

Ph +64 9 826 1738, Email: mbaird@tycoint.com